What is Go?
Go is an abstract strategy board game created thousands of years ago in ancient China and is still one of the most played boards games in the world. It's a two-player game where players take turns placing black and white stones on the board with the aim to surround more territory than your opponent. It has simple rules that can be learned in minutes, but incredible complexity that takes a lifetime to master.
Basic Rules

Go is generally played on a 19×19 board, but 13×13 and 9×9 are also used. One player uses Black stones and the other player uses White.

Go is played on an empty board. Black plays the first move.

Black and White take turns placing stones on empty intersections, including the sides and corners.

Stones are captured and removed from the board when they are completely surrounded.

The game ends when both players pass in succession.

Stones are captured when a group has no liberties.

Dead stones are removed from the board.

The player with the largest area (stones and territory) wins the game.

Capturing Stones

Stones of the same colour form a group when directly adjacent. Groups are captured and removed when they have no liberties (adjacent empty spaces).

The liberties of a group are the liberties of all the stones that make up the group. Every group on the board must have at least one liberty, or it is captured.

Liberties can be removed by placing stones next to a group. When Black places a stone on the last liberty of the White group, Black captures the group. When captured, all of the stones in the group are removed.

A stone cannot be placed where it would be captured, unless it captures the opponent first. This means a group is alive if it has at least two separate internal liberties.

The Black group on the left can be captured (dead), but the one on the right cannot (alive). Can you see why?

The Ko Rule

You cannot make a move that immediately repeats a board state. This rule is called Ko.

You cannot recapture in Ko. The game cannot end in a never-ending game. White has to play elsewhere.

The game ends when a player passes in succession.

Ending the Game

When a player passes, the game ends. The player with the largest area (stones and territory) wins the game.

Territory needs to be completely surrounded before it can be scored. The total score for a player is the sum of stones on the board and the territory that they surround.

White also receives additional points for playing second (Komi), which is about 7 depending on the rule-set.
